EMILIE J. HUTCHINSON

On Wednesday, January 12, 1938, at half past one in the morning, Professor Emilie J. Hutchinson suddenly succumbed, leaving family, and friends stunned by shock and grief. She had worked in her office, as frequently she did, until past eleven o'clock.

Now that she is gone, it is Professor Hutchinson herself who helps us carry on without her. She had long set the example of meeting life and its emergencies with spirit and courage. Problems which appeared insurmountable she faced with integrity and imagination, always with warmth and magnanimity toward those involved. These are the qualities which fortify and stimulate us in the attempt to make them live, after her, in the College and the department to which she gave nearly half of her life.

Miss Hutchinson was born in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, October 3, 1877. As a girl, she lived for several years in an English boarding school. Her high school education began in the Northfield Seminary in Massachusetts, which she left in the middle of the course. After three years she decided to follow her mother's profession, teaching. With this resolution she visited Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn, requesting to be admitted without examinations.

Her ability being recognized, formalities were waived, and she was permitted to enter on her own terms. Professor Robert von Nardroff and Dr. Herbert Lowe, directed her to a liberal arts college instead of a teachers' training school, recognizing her potentialities. This timely guidance revealed to her how important a teacher is to his students. When the year was up Miss Hutchinson not only was graduated, but also received the title of "Brooklyn Scholar" under the award of a competitive scholarship which she held throughout her course at Barnard College.

As a student at Barnard, Miss Hutchinson soon became a leader. She was elected president of her Sophomore class, editor-in-chief of MORTARBOARD, and president of the Undergraduate Association. Graduating with Phi Beta Kappa honors, she became an instructor at Mount Holyoke and at Wellesley for five years, both institutions offering her permanent posts. Then her Alma Mater invited her to return to fill the first position ever offered to a woman in the Economics Department. Here she was active and full of plans up to the last hour of her life.

While teaching, Professor Hutchinson took her doctorate at Columbia University, writing her dissertation on "Women's Wages." She sat on the important administrative committees of Barnard College, and was Chairman of the Administrative Board of the Barnard Summer School for Women Workers in Industry. For six years she was Chairman of the Committee on Fellowship Awards of the American Association of University Women. In 1917 she received a year's leave of absence to become Manager of the Intercollegiate Bureau of Occupations, investigating under their auspices the education and professional experience of more than one thousand women who had received the Ph.D. degree from American universities since 1877. This work was published in 1929 by the Institute of Women's Professional Relations. In 1921 Miss Hutchinson received the Alice Freeman Palmer Memorial Fellowship for a year's study abroad. In recent years her professional interests centered upon problems of the consumer in modern society and she was engaged in writing a book on this subject.

At a meeting of the Faculty on January 24th, Dean Gildersleeve read from the Minutes as follows:

"The Faculty of Barnard College records its profound sorrow at the loss of Emilie J. Hutchinson, a graduate of Barnard in the Class of 1905, Associate Professor of Economics, Chairman of the Department of Economics and Social Science, for twenty-five years a member of the teaching staff of the College.

"While she was an undergraduate, Miss Hutchinson's clear intelligence, sound judgment, strength of character, and power of leadership were already manifest in her direction of our student government. During her long service as an officer of the college she was an excellent teacher, and a competent scholar in her field of work, a wise counsellor and friend of her students, and a sound and influential leader of opinion in faculty deliberations, an able and farsighted administrator of an important department.

"But above all she is remembered for the perfect scholarly integrity of her mind and character, for her unselfish devotion to her work, and for the warm humanity of her spirit. These traits won for her the deep respect and affection of her colleagues."

After the reading of this tribute, President Butler rose and the faculty stood with him for a moment of silence.

From the outset, the class of 1938 modestly admits that it has been a record-breaker. When, on Freshman Day, four years ago, it made its debut, a dismal September rain rendered it impossible to hold the traditional tea on the North Terrace. An unhappy beginning, surely, but it was one that set a precedent for the precedent-breaking that was to become the keynote in the career of the class.

Beginning with a minor change in tradition, that of being the first freshman class to be allowed to hold an off-campus dance, 1938 climaxed its record-breaking in its junior year by turning out a MORTARBOARD whose accounts actually showed a profit, and a Junior Show which needed no red ink with which to write its losses. (There weren't any!) For the former phenomenon Editor Helen Raebeck and Manager Edna Holtzman deserve credit; for the latter, Judy Lenert and her committee.

But even this remarkable class was not able to do anything about the Greek Games tradition. That the freshmen lose and the sophomores win has become more than a tradition; it is an axiom. However, as freshmen, 1938 allowed the sophomores a none too easily won victory, and a year later emerged triumphant over the class of 1939.

As soon as its freshman year, with its too-frequent D's was past history, 1938 adopted the usual sophomore attitude, "Why take life too seriously? You'll never get out of it alive." This was the spirit which pervaded at the sophomore class luncheon, at which Professor Peardon was guest of honor, and Elspeth Davies, class historian, made the occasion a source of much merriment.

Junior Show, too, demonstrated that 1938 did not take life too seriously. Parodies on Eugene O'Neill, Warner Brothers, Lewis Carroll, and William Randolph Hearst, humorously proved that "It Doesn't Happen Here."

What did happen here, though, was the stupendous, colossal Junior Prom. Held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Pierre with Art Paulson's perfectly-smooth-my-dear orchestra, the affair was just about perfect, due to the work of Ruth Inscho and her co-workers.

Of a class which had broken records, it was to be expected that its senior year would be epoch-making. Senior Week plans, formulated early in the term by Chairman Adi-Kent Thomas, aroused expectations of another great event in the life of the class of 1938. Brains were wracked, classes cut, and lunches forgotten in the attempt to render this year's Senior Week "different." And it was. Senior Week with its All-College Party in the gym preceding Step-Singing, and its Senior Reception in Brooks Hall will not be forgotten.

Looking back on its entrance in Barnard, when it had been given a dousing rather than a rousing welcome, 1938 fell to wondering if it would rain on Commencement Day, and if gloomy skies then would really be a good omen as on Freshman Day four years ago.

A brief excursion into the past by means of an afternoon spent in perusing the Barnard Annual of 1894, the original issue of MORTARBOARD, revealed the following summary of its college career by the Junior Class. Perhaps it was the atmosphere of the Gay-Nineties that inspired the tone of self-confidence or perhaps this optimism is a characteristic feature of every Junior class. Whether it be due to one or the other of these causes, we, of the Fiftieth Class, accept the spirit of the first Junior Class History and append a few words in description of our own.

"Three years of mingled sweetness and bitterness we have passed within the loved halls of Barnard College. What hard-won wisdom and experience have been gained in that time. The days of abject despair are over. Gone are the hours when the work was beyond our ability and dread instructors frightened away the few ideas left us when we reached the classroom. Now, no work is too hard —now, no longer can an instructor inspire us with awe. When a class has arrived at such a state in its career what need is there for self-praise?

"Freshmen think they own not only the college, but the universe.

"The Sophomores, however, vigorously dispute this claim. As for the Seniors—every one realizes their greatness. This is the hour of triumph. Now they rule their little world, but next year they may be unheard of in the vaster world. Then, perhaps, no one will consider them; now they are the cynosures of all eyes. But the Juniors, the happy Juniors, have become so great that it is in truth unnecessary for them to praise themselves. All the world sees that they are the one and only class with both a glorious past and a glorious future."

The Class of 1939 is indeed a class with a glorious past and a glorious future. It began its distinguished career with an appearance in "angel-robes," a costume which would have amazed the Ninety-Fivers. After a winter of teas—how much our predecessors missed with just one tea a year to promote social intercourse!—and an initiation into Barnard mid-years, the class made its formal debut in February, at the Freshman Dance in the Casa Italiana. The other important event of that same Spring was Greek Games in which the joy of participating in the Games was mingled with the disappointment of losing them. A certain two weeks in May revealed to a Freshman just how unhappy life can be, but this was soon forgotten in the gaiety and fellowship of the class luncheon.

The class discovered that its second year was much the same as its first, although this time it managed the Soph-Fresh Party and won Greek Games and added to its achievements by its participation in the Building Fund Fair.

The Junior year, however, justified the prophecy of a glorious future. Eighteen-Ninety-Fivers would have viewed the "Thirty Nine Steps" with consternation, but perhaps they, too, would have liked to join the new charm classes with their course in the proper technique in getting a husband.

As Seniors, the Class of '39 will continue its glorious future, and in the words of the first Junior historian, "When a class has arrived at such a state in its career, what need is there for self-praise?"

SOME JUNIORS IN THEIR MORE INFORMAL MOMENTS

SOPHOMORES

The class of 1940, having survived its initial year and entered on that strange interlude of obscurity known as sophomore year, deserves some kindly obituary and enconium for services rendered. Just why the hectic excitement of one's freshman days should be succeeded by this period of retirement from the public eye, we do not know; but the fact can scarcely be denied. The other three classes are constantly reveling in the pleasant light of publicity. Freshmen are continually regaled with teas, banquets, and jollifications, lest they grow homesick, neglect their studies, and become ineligible. In the midst of this fulsome feting, the bright young things are perpetually attended by a chorus of praise for having come to Barnard. Seniors, on the other hand, are continually praised for their perseverance in having stayed in Barnard for three years. They also wear caps and gowns on an inordinate number of occasions, and some of them even have the audacity—and the power—to tap you on the shoulder and tell you that you can't light that cigarette here. Juniors, as every one knows, lead a life of dazzling gayety, diverting themselves with stately elegance at The Prom, frolicking, in less stately and more inelegant fashion, in The Show, and putting out, in their more serious moments, The Year Book.

But lo, the poor sophomore, who for no crime of her own is doomed to dismal oblivion! Search though we may through catalogue and blue book, we can find no dazzling program for sophomore year comparable to that laid out for the other classes. Sophomores do, in truth, choose their majors. This affords a pleasant sense of journey's end for those fortunate ones who have felt the call to be English majors ever since they read Hamlet and The Idylls of the King, in special high school editions. Those who have not the gift of certainty are at least able to relish the solemnity of the occasion, feeling a momentous kinship with Caesar crossing the Rubicon, Balboa sighting the Pacific, or a coed choosing a sorority. But the glamour soon fades. Friendly professors, once solicitous for converts to their departments, are likely to decide that even the one lost sheep, now safely corralled, is not such a big fish after all, and must take as many required courses as any one else. Hence the Sophomore is back where she started: there is really nothing for the poor girl to do with her time, beyond sitting in libraries and studying.

The fate of the class of 1940 has been sealed; it has last been heard of, at this writing, as a participant in the Sophomore-Freshman party (a mere temporary basking in reflected glory, of course); February twenty-sixth it emerged for the Sophomore Dance; it did not return to prominence again until April third, when it miraculously arose from its ashes to win—the gods of Hellas being favorable—Greek Games. Where it spent the interim, no one knows. We have sometimes doubted its actual presence on the campus during this time, but the pictures on the opposite page seem to indicate its unobtrusive existence. If you, charitable reader, chance to meet a sophomore, do not be alarmed, rather speak kindly to her, tell her that her eclipse will not continue forever, and that if she is a good girl, and studies her lessons, she may one day grow up to be a junior.

FRESHMEN

At the present moment the history of '41 is neither deep nor dark—we are those unfortunate young things "without a past." We have patiently undergone all those operations which make one a full-fledged undergraduate of Barnard, and so we hope to have gained the rather serious expression greatly needed by a frosh in the presence of those—oh, so scornful—sophomores. The Class of '41 sprang into being one sultry day last June at which moment we were weighed to see if our scholastic aptitude was heavy enough. Later we underwent various medical examinations in the garments we had so recently brought with us from heaven.

Came the day of our christening—Freshman Day. We were dressed in our finest robes and were proudly exhibited by our big sisters. And what a lot of nice godparents we were to have! We shall never forget the welcome we received that day though we grow to be old and gray like our venerable friends, the seniors.

Tuesday of opening week we registered at Barnard's city hall. For hours we sat in our perambulators waiting in a long line in front of those sacred portals. Wednesday and Friday at four o'clock we took our first solid food at teas and met many of our charming godparents again. Later we uttered our first words in speech class and took our first steps at the Coffee Hour dance.

It is a wonder that those of us from Brooks and Hewitt nurseries survived entrance into so exciting an existence! No sooner did we arrive than our big sisters whisked us away to see the big city—a fairyland of big building blocks and colored stars twinkling everywhere—blinking on and off.

We were royally entertained one night by the Sophomores who bent down from their heights temporarily to make our orientation more delightful than it had been.

One night the Dean visited us and told us how Barnard had been when she entered it. It seems there were only a few infants at that time, and they didn't go to school in a building with a circle in the floor called Jake. Still another night, instead of going to the refectory for supper we stayed on our various floors, met other girls who lived there, and thoroughly enjoyed the floor parties. We went to Greek Games full of hope and returned still full of hope but with less exuberance. And we have learned how to handle a tea cup with just the right amount of bravado and nonchalance.

All of us, day and dorm alike, are growing rapidly. We toddle about with great determination—if not grace. Soon we shall find ourselves turned sophomores with a glorious childhood behind us—a past as well as a future.

ASSOCIATE ALUMNAE OF BARNARD

A STORY OF BEGINNINGS

It is hard to believe that such Barnard fixtures as the Physical Education Department and the Dormitories once had to get a start in life, but start they did and the story is interesting. Here it is, with additions.

Just a year after the Alumnae Association was founded in February, 1895, it was voted to make fittings for a gymnasium the object of money-raising. The object was later changed to the new building fund (the college then being housed in "343"), but the alumnae continued to interest themselves in student athletics. In 1905, after an investigation of the health of Barnard students, the alumnae conferred with the Trustees as to the possibility of securing "definite gymnasium instruction for Freshmen," and supplied the amount of the instructor's fee. This resulted in two hours a week instruction in the Teachers College gym, substitution of some other form of exercise being permitted for one of the required hours. Not until 1917 did Barnard have a gymnasium and a full-fledged Physical Ed of its own.

The Ella Weed Memorial Reading Room was another early project of the Associate Alumnae. They raised money for decorations, furniture, and books. It became the official College Library. Now it serves as Faculty Room in Milbank, the books having been moved in 1917 to Barnard Hall.

In 1905, Fiske Hall, which had been used as a dormitory, had to be made available to the science departments. The Alumnae Association met the emergency by administering a temporary dormitory on 122nd Street for a year. Meanwhile, the Trustees raised the money for a new building and in the fall of 1907 Brooks Hall was opened. Again in 1916, the alumnae took up the residence problem and organized a cooperative dormitory at 99 Claremont Avenue. This demonstration of the need led to the erection of Hewitt Hall.

For many years the alumnae as volunteers conducted an employment bureau, before it became a College function under Miss Doty. Interestingly enough, it was the writer, Alice Duer Miller, who was finding jobs for young alumnae in those early days.

Way back in 1898, an alumnae committee was appointed which has raised and distributed money for student loans ever since.

The alumnae's dream of a Barnard camp first arose in 1916. Camps were rented for a number of years, but in 1933 the dream became reality when the alumnae proudly presented the College with a Camp of its own.

In these and many other ways, the history of Barnard is interwoven with that of its alumnae organization. Countless other activities—the Advisory Vocational meetings for students, the Give and Take Thrift Shop for scholarships, the Alumnae Monthly, the Alumnae Fund, the Alumnae Tuesday Nights, to mention a few—keep the Alumnae Office and over a hundred volunteers very busy for Barnard.

The alumnae officers, listed below, welcome suggestions from the future alumnae as to how the Association can best serve the student body.

UNDERGRADUATE ASSOCIATION

The student activities fee of three dollars which is paid each semester really might be considered the dues of the Undergraduate Association. Each matriculated student automatically becomes a member of the organization on payment of the fee, and is thereupon eligible for participation in student government. The officers of the Undergraduate Association are Elspeth Davies, president; Ruth Inscho, vice-president; Jean Allison, treasurer; and Deborah Allen, secretary. These officers are also members of Student Council, of which the undergraduate president is ex-officio chairman.

The legislative body of the Undergraduate Association is Representative Assembly. It is composed of Student Council, the club and publication heads, student council appointees, class representatives, and members from the college at large. Due to the size of this body, the transaction of important business was difficult, so this year in Representative Assembly the Constitution of the Undergraduate Association was revised by a committee of two, Ruth Inscho and Alene Freudenheim. While this reduced the number of members in the body, the basis of representation was left unchanged. Several student council appointees were dropped from Representative Assembly to reduce the total number. The only addition was the making of Jean Libman, the Barnard A. Y. C. delegate, a member.

The Student Fellowship drive this year suffered at first through general apathy on the part of the school. At Representative Assembly it was voted to have a meeting of the Undergraduate Association in the gymnasium to discuss three choices—the continuance of the fellowship, the abolishment of the fellowship, or the establishment of an American fellowship. The student body voted for the continuing of the foreign student fellowship, and thus pledged its support.

Being a member of the Undergraduate Association entitles the student to be a member of a class, any club she wishes, of the Athletic Association (automatically), and permits her to receive the Barnard Bulletin and Quarterly. Under the provisions of the Honor Code and the Board of Senior Proctors, the honor system is practiced at Barnard. Various student committees help enrich student life at Barnard, all under the combined supervision of the faculty and Undergraduate Association.

STUDENT COUNCIL

The executive body of the Undergraduate Association is Student Council, which is composed of twelve members; four of whom are officers of the Association, four are class presidents, the editor of Bulletin, the president of the Athletic Association, the Dormitory president, and the chairman of Honor Board. At weekly meetings Student Council discusses issues concerning the student body, its relations with outside organizations, and its policies in the college. It has the power to charter clubs, control their finances, and to supervise their social programs.

The members of Student Council are elected in February and March and are installed the following month. They continue in office until the following April.

The entire student body is represented by the officers of the Undergraduate Association, the chairman of Honor Board, the president of the Athletic Association, and the editor of Bulletin. Again, each classified student is represented by her class president, and dormitory residents have further representation by their president. Since Student Council is really the executive body, Representative Assembly being the legislative, this representation is adequate. The main reason for the efficiency of Student Council is its limited size.

REPRESENTATIVE ASSEMBLY

Representative Assembly, the legislative body of the Undergraduate Association, is made up of about seventy-five students. In order to make the Assembly a more workable, representative body, a number of changes were made this year in accordance with the suggestions of Alene Freudenheim and Ruth Inscho, who had been appointed to revise the constitution. The number of members will remain the same, but the constituency of the Assembly has been changed.

No student council appointees excepting Eligibility, Press Board, and Curriculum Chairmen, will have seats in Representative Assembly. The three who will retain their seats will be elected by the Assembly from a slate of not more than three candidates submitted by Student Council.

From the publications, only the editors of Bulletin, MORTARBOARD, and Quarterly will retain their seats.

A number of other changes were made for the purpose of increasing representation from the College at large, and decreasing the appointees.

Aside from the problem of constitutional revision, the Assembly has, on the suggestion of Student Council, modified the program of Tuesday assemblies so that club participation may be furthered. In future years, a good portion of the Assemblies will be managed directly by individual clubs.

In addition to these changes, Representative Assembly has carried on such more or less routine business as choosing delegates to go to conventions, calling all-college meetings relative to the Student Fellowship Drive, and helping to work out a comprehensive program of anti-war work for the college.

HONOR BOARD

The belief that Barnard students are sufficiently adult to comprehend the meaning of personal integrity forms the basis of our honor system. Upon entering college, each freshman automatically comes under its jurisdiction, but she is requested to accept the Honor Code by signature. Any objections to the system as a whole or in part may be noted so that there can be no excuse for failure to accept the Code.

The Honor Code, adopted in 1922 and amended in 1925 and 1933, formulates the ideals of college honor. Any irregular actions, such as the giving or receiving of information in examinations, the unauthorized use of books or papers, and the presentation of any work not strictly personal, are dishonest; and as evidence of dishonesty, they are reprehendable.

It is the duty of Honor Board to investigate violations of the Honor Code. Anyone suspected of malfeasance is informed of her position. If the suspect is guilty, the power of penalty rests with the Faculty. The Board, however, may recommend punishment.

The successful operation of the Code depends upon the willingness of the students to cooperate. Therefore, the witness is urged to report an overt act to the Board. She may, if she prefers, speak to the offender herself. The Honor Board, however, should be informed of such infringements so that steps may be taken to set the offender on the right track.

RESIDENCE HALLS

Hewitt and Brooks Halls, the Barnard College dormitories, can be considered residence clubs. They are not merely boarding houses, but homes for those out-of-town students where they can be together. Dances, both formal supper dances and "coffee hours" are held at regular intervals to relieve the pangs of those afflicted with homesickness.

"Exec" is the governing body of the Residence Halls. It has charge of all social functions, fire drills, rules concerning quiet hours, latenesses, radios, and many other matters that arise in the administration of the dormitories. Required meetings are held monthly. At the February meeting the constitution, revised by a committee headed by Anne Milman, was voted upon and accepted.

This year a Beaux Arts ball was held in Brooks Hall, which was open to day students as well as residents. Another successful novelty was the informal dance in the Hewitt Hall dining room, which was open to those who had attended Junior Show, held earlier in the evening.

Dormitory life, in general, is uneventful. Between bridge, quiet hours, cafeteria breakfasts and lunches, served dinners, and coffee hours, time marches on. Homework is done some time—no one knows exactly when. Sometimes someone gets up for Sunday breakfast. Really, the dormitories are so well managed and smoothly run that the average day student doesn't know they exist. But they do—obviously—and are an important part of student life at Barnard. The presence of two real dormitories somehow makes Barnard seem like a real college.

SENIOR PROCTORS

All social groups have some kinds of rules and regulations, and a body of supervisors to see that these laws are kept. In Barnard there are few restrictions and a minimum of "policing." The Board of Senior Proctors aims not to punish those who break the rules of the college, but rather to emphasize the importance of these rules to the offenders. The duties of the board are explanatory, not vindictive.

The Board is chosen from the senior class by student council. About thirty Seniors are selected because of their conscientiousness and ability to command attention and respect. The Vice-President of the Undergraduate Association automatically becomes chairman of the Board. The vice-chairman is head of the Court of Senior Proctors, a small group of proctors who consider important infractions of rules.

The duties of the Proctors have been somewhat reduced this year, when the Board was relieved of the responsibility of keeping the library line in order. The Senior Proctors see that the smoking rules of the College are obeyed, and that quiet is maintained during examinations and registration periods. They also control the taking and checking of attendance at required college assemblies and manage all-college elections.

All in all, the Board of Senior Proctors has proved itself to be a quiet efficient organization this year. Realizing that the object of the body was to make the wheels of Barnard run smoothly, the College has shown excellent cooperation.

SILVER BAY CONFERENCE

The Silver Bay Conference, a theological experiment managed by the Y. M. C. A. and attended by representatives from some of the largest colleges in the East, was held in June, 1937, for the second time. Meeting at beautiful Lake George, in upper New York State, participants in the convention found that their stay was definitely enjoyable as well as educational.

The aim of the conference is "to exploit religion for living values"—or in other words, to encourage the attitude that religion is a part of everyday life, rather than a thing apart. This year's discussions were concerned with the stimulation of religious activity throughout the country, the infusion of religion into marriage and the home, and the contemplation of methods through which religion might be used to remedy social problems.

Barnard's thirteen delegates were justifiably proud to have one of their number, Elspeth Davies, chosen as Senior Chairman of the Conference. Delegates were chosen by the student body from a list made up by trustees of the College and by Miss Weeks in conjunction with the class presidents. Those attending in June were Jane Bell, Deborah Allen, Edna Jones, Louise Preusch, Elspeth Davies, Sophia Simmonds, June Williams, Margaret Pardie, Ann Meding, Helen Geer, Doris Milman, Helen Knapp, and Helen Jefferson.

MODEL LEAGUE

Barnard carried on the precedent this year of participating in the sessions of the Model League of Nations. Using the Geneva Congress of Powers as a pattern, the colleges from the Middle Atlantic states meet each year to discuss problems of international interest and significance. To make the conference more realistic, the students from each college represent a specific country. In all discussions each delegation is expected to present that nation's policies faithfully, just as they would be presented in the authentic League. This year the Model League of Nations met at Rutgers University, in April, and the Barnard delegation represented the policies of New Zealand.

Delegates to the Model League were headed by Kathryn Smul, and were chosen by a newly established system. Faculty members from both the History and Government departments recommended students for the League on the basis of their interest in, and knowledge of, international relations. Ability to discuss foreign policies effectively and intelligently was another criterion for suggesting students to the Model League committee. The committee later selected the final delegates from the numerous recommendations that had been received.

AMERICAN YOUTH CONGRESS

The American Youth Congress is a permanent federation of national and local youth organizations of which Representative Assembly is a member. Unlike other youth organizations, membership in the Congress is not limited to schools and colleges, but is open to any youth group, be it trade union, religious organization, settlement house, or academic body.

The Youth Congress acts as a national clearing house for youth organizations interested in discussing mutual problems and working out joint solutions. In accordance with this program, a Model Congress of the United States was held in Milwaukee last July, and a Model Legislature of New York State was conducted in New York City in January. Next July, the American Youth Congress intends to organize a Model Community of Youth as an experiment for young people in community planning.

A vital part of the Youth Congress program is the yearly pilgrimage to Washington. This year delegates from almost every state petitioned their congressmen for the expansion of the National Youth Administration and the passing of the American Youth Act. The delegates attended sessions of the Senate, observed the inner workings of the government, and paraded down Constitution Avenue with the slogan, "Jobs, Health, and Education for the Youth of the Nation."

LAND AND BUILDING FUND

This year the undergraduate committee of the Land and Building Fund decided to give three events, one in the fall, winter, and spring.

In October, the Campus Carnival was held on the lawn between the Jungle and Barnard Hall. It was a brisk day but not too cold for Barnardites to eat heartily and play enthusiastically. The campus was decorated with balloons, corn stalks, autumn leaves, and pumpkins. The climax of the Carnival was the folk dancing held in the gymnasium under the direction of Mr. Arthur Leon Moore, head of the Folk Dancing Council. The Carnival was planned and managed by June Williams with the assistance of Jane Bell.

In January a photography contest was held. It was open to undergraduates, alumnae, and faculty members of Barnard. The regulations of the contest were few, requiring only the size of the exhibit and mount, and the classifications of Still Life, Landscape, and Portrait. The winners were: in the first group, Anita Este; the second, Margaret Pardee and Ruth Lewis; and in the third, Marguerite Ver Kruzen. The judges were three men prominent in three different fields of art: Mr. C. E. Chambers, well known painter and illustrator; Mr. Wendell MacRae, commercial photographer; and Professor George Eggers, head of the Department of Fine Arts at City College. The prizes were donated by many prominent concerns. The grand prize, a portable typewriter donated by the Underwood Elliott Fisher Company, was won by Frances Krasnow, an alumna.

The last of the three events was the Spring Dance, managed by Barbara Ridgway and assisted by Marion Cowles. It was one of the largest dances ever given at the college. As a novelty, the parlors and studies in Barnard Hall were thrown open for use by the guests.

ASSEMBLIES

College assemblies are held at Barnard on Tuesdays at 1:10 o'clock. Each year there are at least three required meetings, and many voluntary assemblies.

Freshmen were initiated into assemblies for the first time in October when Dean Gildersleeve spoke to them on the ideals of college in her annual "orientation" lecture.

"Your Attitude Towards the World Situation" was her subject at the first all-college required assembly this year. A majority of the student body at the second required assembly voted that the International Student Fellowship be continued.

Dean Gildersleeve's annual Christmas Message to students was broadcast, as usual, at the Christmas assembly. The Barnard and Columbia Glee Clubs and the Barnard String Ensemble were featured on the program. The "Kyrie" from the sixteenth century mass, "Puer Natus," was sung for the first time in America.

At other assemblies speakers were heard on various subjects. Joseph McGoldrick and John Sullivan made addresses just before the city elections. In February, President Butler made his annual address.

A new idea in assemblies at Barnard was introduced the second semester. Barnard clubs were invited to participate in the assemblies. The Music and Aesthetics clubs presented "Bastien and Bastienne," a marionette operetta by Mozart. Other programs were planned by Wigs and Cues, Glee, and Debate Clubs.

TEAS

Every Wednesday at four o'clock is College Tea time. We polish up the handle on the big tea pot, gather all our friends from the library line, modulate our voices, and finally take part in this pleasant social event. Books and worries are left outside the college parlor. Day and dormitory students, faculty members and special guests mingle in the friendly atmosphere, enjoying this afternoon recess. In fact, there are few social activities at college where such a representative group of students is present. Unlike the Mad Hatter's tea party, there is always room for more, tea and cookies for all, and sometimes sandwiches besides.

Most of the teas are given by the Undergraduate Association. Others are held by special organizations or classes in the college, or by the Associate Alumnae. At some teas a speaker is presented to the guests. At others members of the student body, usually candidates for an office, are introduced.

CAROLINE DUNCOMBE }
ELIZABETH HARPEL } . . . . . Co-chairmen

COFFEE DANCES

The Cafeteria Coffee dances take place in October, November, December, February, March, and April. Couples and about sixty "stags" sign up for the dance, paying a nominal sum. The Social Committee invites approximately one hundred men from Columbia and elsewhere, as special guests.

Rustic costumes which are usually seen around the campus are discarded. Silks and satins appear in their stead, because the one ruling that the Social Committee has made does not permit sweaters and skirts to be worn at the dances.

Barnard students who do not come to the dance escorted have ample chance to meet anyone at the affair. A girl has only to cut in on any couple that is dancing, and the man belongs to her—until the next girl taps her on the shoulder. Over coffee cups and cookies there is more opportunity to become acquainted.

Gertrude Boyd was the chairman of the coffee dances and her committee included members of the three upper classes. They were, from the Senior class: Ruth Inscho, Ruth Landesman, Margaret King, Dorothy Benedict; from the Junior class: Jean Allison, Jane Bell, Dorothy Stockwell, Elizabeth Jackson and Shirley Simon; from the Sophomore class: Betsy Harpel, Frances Dinsmoor, Caroline Duncombe, Anne Meding and Janet Gowen.

BULLETIN

Barnard Bulletin, under the leadership of Helen Raebeck, continued this year in its efforts to publish material covering all phases of student life, and to perfect the form of the paper which had been established the year before.

Supplementing the routine articles and notices, two new columns appeared in alternate issues, "Through the Din," and "Once-Overs." "About Town" was enlarged and placed in a new position on the editorial page. Under the direction of Shirl Rothenberg, this column of criticism included as a special feature "Places to Go" in New York.

Early in the year an Assistant News Board was formed. In February, after the "cubs" had received sufficient experience, promotions were made to the News Board. The Assistant Editorial Board, introduced last year, was continued.

In addition, the "beat" system was maintained. By this method, each reporter is assigned to a special field of activity in the university and is responsible for the reporting of all events in that field.

In order to maintain contact with student groups throughout the country, delegates from Bulletin were sent to the National American Student Union Convention held at Vassar College during the Christmas holidays and to the American Youth Congress Pilgrimage to Washington in March.

In cooperation with student newspapers throughout New York City, Bulletin published several joint editorials on peace, and on the anti-syphilis drive.

HELEN RAEBECK . . . . . Editor

ANNE BARANOVSKY . . . . . Business Manager

QUARTERLY

"Quarterly will represent not only students who specialize in the short story or poetry, but also those who have interests in other fields. We hope to have articles on current literary trends, on music, on art, and on the world about us. We want to include as much art work as possible. In short we want to represent all student interests that can be expressed in word or line," declared Miss Evelyn Lichtenberg, editor of Quarterly.

It is indeed evident that with her characteristic efficiency Miss Lichtenberg has carried out all of her plans. Instead of appearing eight times as was the policy last year, Quarterly reverted to former traditions, again having but four issues. Each article that appeared in the magazine was discussed with much care by all members of the staff, as well as by contributors who were invited to join laboratory sessions held at intervals specifically for this purpose. In these meetings much critical insight was exercised both in the selection of material and the subsequent judgment of its literary merit.

Although a literary magazine, Quarterly did not hesitate to present articles on current social problems, such as "Collective Security" and "Polish Youth"; nor did it neglect the faculty. Each issue contained a vivid biographical sketch of a favorite professor. The books reviewed were chosen because it was felt that they would be of particular interest to readers of Quarterly. In addition to widening the scope of material presented, the magazine has been written especially for the enjoyment of the entire student body.

Evelyn Lichtenberg ..... Editor

Ruth Halle ..... Business Manager

PRESS BOARD

Although a comparatively new organization—having been established only five years ago—the Press Board has carried on an extensive program this past year. The group has retained for its main activity the writing of news released for local papers on the subject of undergraduate participation in extra-curricular work. These releases have a two-fold function; they give the members practical experience in the newspaper world and also serve as a means of distributing college news.

This year the Press Board continued the practice of giving teas in honor of well-known writers on magazines and newspapers. Among those who in the past were guests of the group are Miss Emma Bugbee, the press correspondent for Mrs. Roosevelt, and Miss Helen Wonder of the New York World Telegram.

The Press Board keeps in contact with newspapers from cities and towns throughout the United States and sends out news releases to the more important papers of the country. Each of its members thus has direct contact with professional journalism—contacts which often have the practical value of securing her a position on newspapers already acquainted with her work on Press Board.

Although the membership of Press Board is limited in order to secure an efficient working group, all students interested in journalism are eligible to try out for it at the beginning of the year and, once admitted, to take an active part in this student organization.

SHEILA BAKER . . . . . Chairman

ALICE WARNE . . . . . Secretary-Treasurer

There are styles in year books just as there are styles in clothes, food, houses, and even in dogs. Several years ago a newer, informal annual made its appearance on college campuses. The first candid year book at Barnard was the 1937 MORTARBOARD, edited by Frances Henderson. For the first time in MORTARBOARD history themes were discarded and informality was made the keynote. Helen Raebeck, editor of the 1938 MORTARBOARD, continued in this tradition. The size of the book was changed from the dimensions of the mortarboard worn with the academic gown to a larger and rectangular book, thus making room for more pictures and better layouts.

The 1939 MORTARBOARD has tried to present a complete picture of campus activities, and not to limit its content to the doings of the junior class. The profusion of candid camera shots which distinguished the 1937 and 1938 annuals from their predecessors were made a major part of the 1939 book, thus presenting an all-around picture of college life.

One of the new features instituted this year was the section dedicated to the freshmen. The editors felt that inasmuch as 1941 and 1939 are sister classes, their connection should be apparent in a more permanent way than mere teas and luncheons.

As for pictures. The photographer haunted the campus for the major part of the year in order to get trick shots of the buildings and grounds; his knack of snapping a picture so as to make the Barnard campus appear to cover half of Manhattan was truly miraculous; and the delightful view of the lone vine on Barnard Hall certainly arouses a feeling of cloistered security.

MORTARBOARD endorsed wholeheartedly the ruling established by Representative Assembly that the editor and business manager be elected by the college at large from a slate drawn up by the former editor and business manager with the approval of the Assembly, the former staff having had a good opportunity to judge the qualifications of possible candidates for these positions and how well each candidate can fulfill the requirements of the offices. However, since MORTARBOARD is an all-college year book, the whole college, rather than just the junior class, should participate in the final selection of the editor and business manager. It is traditional that the book feature the junior class, but it cannot be successful unless it is supported by the whole college. The only way to do this is to make MORTARBOARD representative of the college and to give each student some part in the selection of its management.

These have been the fundamental aims of the 1939 MORTARBOARD, and it is with great pride that this year's staff looks back upon its work, knowing that it has done its best to make the 1939 MORTARBOARD a literary, pictorial and financial success.

GLEE CLUB

In addition to the usual programs at Barnard this year, the Glee Club has had many outside performances. With the Columbia Glee Club, the Barnard club gave a joint concert at the Plaza Hotel in November. The singing was followed by dancing to the Dartmouth Barbary Coast Orchestra. The two college glee clubs combined again in the traditional Christmas Assembly.

Christmas activities were not limited to college however, but included carolling in the wards of Saint Luke's Hospital. The Glee Club also sang at one of the Christmas programs at John Wanamaker's.

As a new activity this year, the Glee Club spent a week-end at the Barnard camp. The Columbia and Barnard Glee Clubs sang together again at a benefit concert at the Saint George Hotel. The proceeds were given to the Brooklyn Inst'tute for the Blind. Because of the excellent performance at this concert, the two glee clubs have been asked to sing at the opening of the New York 1939 World's Fair, May first.

Other activities of the year included two college assemblies; the first featuring songs by the Glee Club and community singing, and the second in conjunction with the Dance Group under the direction of Miss Streng.

Willard Rhodes was conductor and Gena Tenney assistant conductor.

WIGS AND CUES

Wigs and Cues, rubbing its eyes after twenty years like Rip Van Winkle, realized this season that the activities of the club must include more than a mere two productions a year in order to keep the members enthusiastically interested. Branching out into various fields allied with amateur dramatics, the officers of the club arranged a series of talks by persons able to both entertain and instruct the aspiring actresses and stagehands. A make-up demonstration which wrought amazing changes in the model, a lesson in how the well-poised actress will walk, a brief address by Miss Cecilia Zung on the costumes and gestures of the Chinese Theatre, and a talk on T. S. Eliot's "Murder in the Cathedral" by Ashley Dukes were a few of the topics included in the semi-monthly meetings.

Brinckerhoff Theatre blossomed into a tropical island, palm trees and all, for two nights this fall when, with unusual staging by Gertrude and Constance Smith, the club presented Barrie's four-act comedy, "The Admirable Crichton," directed by Miss Anne Morgan, formerly of the Theatre Guild. Following the play on Friday evening Wigs and Cues reverted to an old custom and held a dance in the theatre thus giving the costumers, scenery-shifters, and property-gatherers an opportunity to receive their due compliments.

A bill of three one-act, student-directed plays was presented in the spring, rounding out an eventful season.

CLASSICAL CLUB

One of Barnard's oldest clubs is the Classical Club, which exists for the purpose of encouraging interest in the life, literature, and art of Ancient Greece and Rome, and enabling students in this field to become better acquainted with their professors.

The first of this year's activities was a tea given by Miss Gertrude Hirst, adviser of the club. During the fall semester, the club enjoyed two talks by distinguished visitors. The first, by Professor Frank Gardner Moore who has recently retired from his position in Columbia, was on Rome. Later in the term, Mr. Gilbert A. Hyatt, formerly of Oxford, spoke on the topic, "The Greek Playwright and His Audience."

One of the highlights of the spring semester's activities was a lecture by Professor and Mrs. Young, whose talks on the botany of the islands of Asia Minor had been so popular in former years. This year's continuation of this general topic proved to be as interesting as ever.

The climax of a successful year was a talk by Dr. John Day on the Greek alphabet and its origin.

LA SOCIETE FRANÇAISE

Many and varied have been the activities of La Société Française this year. The social calendar began with a tea in honor of the new French instructor, Monsieur Mesnard. Next came the biggest event of the first semester, the plays "L'Ete de la Saint-Martin" and "J'Invite le Colonel." These were given to augment the fellowship fund. One of the most important aims of the French Club is to send a student to France each summer, financed by this fellowship. The award enables the girl to perfect her accent and to view at close hand the life about which she has been studying. Such a trip, the members feel, is an invaluable opportunity.

Later in the term the group enjoyed lectures by Professor J. A. Bede of Columbia, the French Consul General, Monsieur Charles de Ferry, and Monsieur Henri Morin, manager of the French Line. A tea, Spring Formal, and another lecture completed the program.

One of the main reasons for this most successful year was the advice and help of Madame Varney of the French department.

DEUTSCHER KREIS

Deutscher Kreis opened the year's activities with a broadcast over the NBC short wave station, WRAX. Short talks by Professor Braun and Mr. von Forstmeyer, interviews with several club members, and songs by the entire club were features of the broadcast.

On November 24, club members attended a Bavarian festival and dance given by Deutscher Verein, the Columbia German Club.

The next outstanding event of the year was the traditional Christmas party, given in the Brooks Hall parlor. As is customary, a Nativity play with an Angel Chorus formed the main feature of the party, while the huge Christmas tree lent a very festive air to the occasion. Parts of the Nativity play, given at this time, were later broadcast.

In the spring the members enjoyed a week-end at Barnard Camp. A Bavarian Dance, held by the club, also featured in the spring activities.

At the regular bi-weekly meetings of Deutscher Kreis, the club enjoyed many fine programs. At one of these meetings, Ilse Wiegand, German exchange student, was guest of honor and spoke about her life as a student in Germany. At other meetings, the members watched movies of Germany and listened to a short wave broadcast from Germany.

IL CIRCULO ITALIANO

One of the unique features of the Circulo Italiano with regard to its membership is that one does not have to be an Italian student to be admitted. Any girl interested in things Italian may join, since the club was established to stimulate a desire to learn about all phases of Italian life, and not just to promote the language.

During the first semester of its 1937-38 year, the Circulo headed by Claire Murray included several social events among its activities. The first of these was a tea given in honor of the exchange student from Venice, Carolina Fessia. Miss Fessia is at Barnard to study those courses which will help to prepare her for a degree in philology.

Another affair on the social calendar was a tea held for Emilio Cecchi, an Italian author and art critic. Following was one of the biggest events of the year, the presentation on December 13 at the Casa Italiana of a "Lauda" by Jacopone da Todi. It depicted the simple, lyrical effusions on a religious subject which were presented in ancient times before cathedrals or in the town squares.

EL CIRCULO HISPANO

El Circulo Hispano offers to its members an opportunity to attend lectures, teas, musicales, and dramatic performances, which, aside from providing relaxation, presents Spanish culture in its various aspects.

This year the Spanish Club presented motion pictures of Mexico, slides of Miss Marcial-Dorado's trip in Spain, and a lecture on Spanish architecture as well as the regular teas held monthly, which feature musical and recitative programs. The principal event of the scholastic year was the Christmas play. Everyone worked enthusiastically for its success. The play, "The Egloga del Nacimiento de Nuestro Senor," by Juan della Encina, was first presented in 1498, at the palace of the Duke and Duchess of Alba.

Each year in the Spring, the club arranges a trip to visit the places of interest in New York of Spanish character, having luncheon at a typically Spanish restaurant. It is generally agreed that the high spot of this trip is the viewing of Sorolla's murals in the Hispanic Museum. They are large paintings in extremely vivid colors of the different regions in Spain, depicting the character of the life and the people.

A new activity of the Spanish Club is the Coro Dramático, directed by Miss Sofia Novoa. This group sings Spanish songs which reflect the spirit of Spain in its many manifestations.

The student activities of the club are under the direction of Mrs. Del Rio, and the club is grateful for the loyal support and guidance of Miss Marcial-Dorado.

MUSIC CLUB

Continuing with its traditional teas and meetings, the Music Club has concentrated on extending its field of interest to newer, more unique projects. Under the leadership of the president and with the cooperation of the Aesthetics Club, a marionette show was presented. "Bastien et Bastienne," written by Mozart while a boy, was presented to the alumnae on February twelfth, and later to the college. The vocalists were Lillian Nesbitt, Agnes Cassidy, and Norma Raymond, assisted by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. Willard Rhodes.

At the first of the meetings of the Music Club, Lee Pattison, well known pianist and director of the WPA music division, spoke on music as an avocation. This meeting was followed by a tea at which old stringed instruments were played by Professor Moore. The college was also invited to a talk by Mr. Rudolph Thomas on Richard Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier."

Besides these meetings, the Music Club arranged for student concerts. In the future these recitals may become joint entertainments with music groups of other colleges. Plans have also been started for organizing concert and opera parties which will be preceded by studies of the music to be played.

AESTHETICS CLUB

The Aesthetics Club broke away from the tradition of Barnard clubs of utilizing the lecture method in their meetings and substituted instead combination discussion-teas on definite problems of the arts. The club, which was organized only last year, consists of students with some philosophy or aesthetic background. Thus the members are interested in one or more of the arts and further the relationships that exist between them.

This year the club cooperated with the Music Club in presenting the operetta, "Bastien et Bastienne," composed by Mozart while a boy, to the college. In addition, the members have attempted to take advantage, as far as possible, of such cultural opportunities as art galleries, concerts, and exhibitions of various kinds offered in New York. The club also had the privilege of seeing a collection of rare Chinese porcelain and another of first editions. An excursion to the Institute of Light to view a light concert was another feature of the year.

PATRIOTS

Although it is an old adage that the leopard cannot change its spots, this does not necessarily apply to college political clubs. Admittedly, the Patriots started off as the Barnard Liberty League, and fast became known as the arch-conservative group of the campus. As the fame of the original Liberty League spread, the members of the Barnard organization had a busy time parrying thrusts of "fascism" and "tools of Wall Street." The object of the club was (and is) "to uphold and defend the fundamental principles on which the American government was founded, as they are enumerated in the Constitution of the United States." However, due to past politics, the members of the club realized that the name, regardless of its Barnard connotation, was alienating many potential members. Some of the more far-seeing members of the club, sensing a future national political realignment of the old parties into Conservatives and Labor, saw an opportunity to appeal to those formerly disinterested in governmental problems. Accordingly, last year, the club was reorganized as the Patriots.

Its membership is open to all those who subscribe to its aims, regardless of their political faith. The activities of the club consist of luncheons, meetings with speakers on pertinent political questions, and round table discussions on subjects of which the recent court reorganization plan and federal housing are typical.

SOCIAL SCIENCE UNION

The American Student Union, formerly the Social Science Union, made a decided change in its organization this year. Committees were dissolved, the club meeting as a whole at forums held every three weeks, instead. At these meetings, informal discussions by the students were held.

In order to give these forums a wider scope of interest, the subjects for discussion were chosen by the members of the club before the meeting. In this way each person had ample time to read about the special topic, in order to contribute to the discussions. If the majority felt that an outside speaker would help clarify ideas, a lecturer was invited to a meeting. The emphasis of this year's club, however, as opposed to that of previous years, was not on lecturing, but on giving the students the opportunity to participate in the meetings.

Beside the forums, the A. S. U. held two teas this year. The club cooperated with the Peace Council of Columbia University and also sponsored a special peace week at Barnard in December. Another feature was a fashion show of lisle stockings. For the benefit of the Chinese Student Fund an informal dance was held in Brinkerhoff Theater.

During the second semester, outstanding A. S. U. events included speeches by Corliss Lamont, Professor George Counts of Teachers College, and Lewis Munford, a meeting with the Patriots, and participation in the April peace strike.

PSYCHOLOGY CLUB

The aims of the Psychology Club are two-fold: the application of psychological theories to daily life, and the linking up of the study of psychology with practical work. The activities of the Psychology Club were planned around the attainment of these goals. Several field trips were made to the Vocational Adjustment Bureau for Girls, the Ward's Island Clinic, the Riverside Nursery, the Columbia laboratories, and to Juvenile Court. Other highlights of the fall semester were a week-end at Barnard Camp, an innovation for the Psychology Club, and a tea at which vocational opportunities were discussed. In addition, there were meetings with the Graduate Psychology Club of Columbia University.

DEBATE CLUB

The Debate Club has carried out an ambitious program this year in line with its twofold aim of building up a better knowledge of public speaking in Barnard and of presenting discussion of interest to the student body as a whole.

To further its first aim, the club heard several members of the faculty speak on various phases of debating. Dr. Gayer addressed the club early in the year, telling of the Oxford Union of Public Speaking in England; Dr. Peardon spoke about drawing up briefs; and Mrs. Seals dealt with the technical side of speaking.

In order to give more members an opportunity to practice debating, the club held two debates each semester in addition to presenting one big debate a year, as has been the custom in the past. The subjects of the debates the first term were as follows: Resolved: That Roosevelt run for a third term, and Resolved: That women are not generally equipped to engage in business. Topics of a similar nature were chosen for the debates of the second semester.

The club also carried on plans for arranging "talk-fests" at which members would practice the art of extemporaneous speaking.

Despite its non-participation in intercollegiate activities, the members of the Debate Club feel that it is a valuable factor in Barnard cultural life as well as a source of instruction in public speaking.

PRE-LAW CLUB

In the winter of 1934, a group of girls interested in going to law school formed the Pre-Law Club. The organization remained independent until the spring of 1936, when it joined the Social Science Union. It resigned from that group in the fall of 1936, and since then has been unaffiliated with any other group.

This year the club held monthly meetings, luncheons, teas, and field trips to courts and other places of interest to prospective lawyers. At the October luncheon, Albert Jacobs, professor of family law at the Columbia School of Law, lectured on the selective system of admission to Columbia Law School and opportunities for women in the field of law. At the November tea, Dorothy Kenyon, Deputy Commissioner of Licenses and a prominent lawyer, was guest speaker. Throughout the year, distinguished figures in the field of law were invited to speak.

In the past, the girls have heard such prominent speakers as Dean James Gifford, Professor Pearl Llewellyn, and Harold Medina of the Columbia School of Law, Magistrate Anne Kros, Judge Jonah Goldstein, Judge James Watson, Judge Agnes Craig, and Congresswoman Doris Byrne.

The membership is not limited solely to girls who plan to study law, although the majority of the members are aiming for that goal. The program of activities is planned to follow the interests of all whose ambitions lie within fields concerned with law or public relations.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS CLUB

The International Relations Club was formed to give further opportunities for study to all those interested in problems of world-wide scope. The club time is devoted to general discussions and studies of special problems by small groups. The club maintains, as far as possible, a non-partisan attitude. The members try to investigate issues from all aspects without personal prejudice entering into the interpretation of facts. To keep in contact with actual events, the club is addressed several times each year by prominent lecturers on various subjects of current interest of an international type.

The Carnegie Endowment Fund provides additional possibilities for research with its donations of books, pamphlets, and other reading material for the use of the club members.

Each year delegates from the group attend a conference of all International Relations Clubs of the Colleges of the Middle Atlantic States. This convention, held at various leading Eastern Universities in the past, aims chiefly at the promotion of better understanding among all nations of the world today.

ELAINE GLASTON ..... President

MATHEMATICS CLUB

The newly-formed Mathematics Club was organized for the purpose of enabling those students interested in mathematics, whether majoring in that field or not, to convene to discuss problems of mutual interest and to hear lectures by prominent mathematicians.

It was fitting, therefore, that Professor Kasner of the Barnard Mathematics and Columbia Physics Departments should be the first guest speaker of the Mathematics Club. Professor Kasner had as his subject Fourth Dimensional Figures.

Since it is Barnard's newest club, the Mathematics Club has no history—so to speak. Aside from Professor Kasner's lecture and several meetings for the purpose of organization, there have been no other events. However, the large number of charter members and the size of the audience at the lecture seems to indicate that the Mathematics Club will be one of Barnard's most successful organizations.

The staff of the 1939 MORTARBOARD wishes to take this opportunity to wish the Mathematics Club a prosperous and useful future.

SOCIAL SERVICE COMMITTEE

Acting as a go-between for Barnard and several charitable institutions, the Social Service Committee has arranged positions for many volunteer workers. The committee is in no way similar to other Barnard clubs and organizations, having no meetings or activities for its own benefit. It is a placement board for those girls desiring to do either clinical or settlement work, according to the requests of the various organizations for workers.

This year the committee found suitable volunteer work for about forty applicants in four hospitals and six settlement houses. The work covered a wide range of interests, according to the needs of the institution. Practical and clerical work was performed in the clinics, and assistance given at the juvenile delinquency courts. Volunteers did housing work in the settlements and led group activities.

EPISCOPAL, WYCLIFFE AND LUTHERAN CLUBS

EPISCOPAL CLUB

Several new and interesting plans have been incorporated in the program of the Episcopal Club this year, in accordance with its desire to bring together the Episcopal students of Barnard in their religious, social, and educational interests. The meetings of the group are most frequent, coming on the first Friday of every month. Every Thursday the members of the club go to chapel and then return to Barnard to have lunch together in the alcove of the cafeteria. Informal discussion of social problems, such as the advisability of marriage and a career, are held in the chapel crypt on the fourth Friday of every month. At these gatherings members of the Wycliffe and Lutheran groups are also present.

Like all good Barnard clubs the Episcopal organization has sponsored several teas this year. Mrs. Ladd, the chaplain's assistant, spoke on her recent trip to Denmark at one of these meetings. On November 5, a tea was held at which Miss A. Mildred Balmain described her work at St. Barnabus House, a temporary lodging for homeless women and children.

The Episcopal Club has cooperated this year with the Columbia Student Christian Council. It has attended some of the dinners presented by the University group.

LUTHERAN CLUB

This year the Lutheran Club advanced its activities beyond all-college teas and meetings and participated in several university religious movements. The program of the Lutheran Club was broadened in this way to further well-rounded activities and to make the religion of its members an essential part of their educational life.

Besides the regular luncheon meetings with the other religious clubs of Barnard, the group attended lunches held at John Jay Hall and at the Union Theological Seminary in honor of special chapel speakers.

During October, the Barnard Lutheran Club joined with the students of Columbia College to select delegates to the Columbia Lutheran Student Council. Cooperating with other religious groups of Columbia, the Lutheran Club was represented at the dinner of the Christian Council of Columbia University.

The Lutheran Club was also represented by delegates at the seventh annual Conference of the Lutheran Student Association held in New York City. The subject of the conference was "Lutheran Youth in Action." Dr. Conrad Hofman was the speaker.

Representatives of the Lutheran Club also attended a regional convention of the National Lutheran Student Association which took place in the spring at Wagner College on Staten Island.

WYCLIFFE CLUB

The Wycliffe Club was formed several years ago to meet the need of a club for Protestant religious denominations whose members at Barnard are not numerous enough to warrant the formation of separate organizations. The club has as one of its primary aims the sponsoring of a program which will lead to an "active religion" on the part of its members and, in general, to a more complete and satisfying academic life.

Every Tuesday this year the club attended noonday services at the university chapel, after which the members ate together in the Barnard cafeteria. The second Friday of each month was the club's regular meeting date. The opening activity was the tea to freshmen and transfers, at which Mrs. Ladd, assistant to Chaplain Knox, spoke about her trip to Denmark. In November the Reverend Robert Andrus, counsellor to Protestant students of Columbia University, told of his experiences at the Oxford Conference of Churches. Miss Edith Welker, director of youth education for the New York area of Methodist Episcopal churches, spoke to the club at the December meeting. Miss Welker's talk on "The Home" was appropriate, since informal discussion groups on the home and marriage were held in the chapel the last Friday of each month, the three Protestant clubs participating. Other events were the fall dinner and the Christmas dance of the Columbia Christian Student Council.

MENORAH

The Menorah Society was established in an attempt to foster the study of Jewish culture in modern life, to promote the welfare of Jewish students in Barnard College, and to facilitate social relationship among the Jewish students of the whole of Columbia University.

To introduce the new students to the Society and its activities, Menorah held an opening tea in September. The Society sponsored several social events in cooperation with the Columbia Jewish Students' Society and the Columbia Graduate Society. The first of these was a tea-dance, on October 14. A formal dance was held during the Christmas vacation with the Columbia Jewish Students' Society. To celebrate the Purim festival in the Spring, there was another tea-dance at the Theological Seminary.

Its meetings this year were devoted to a series of lectures concerning phases of Jewish culture. At the opening meeting in October, Dr. Leo Jung discussed "The Social Society" from the viewpoint of Jewish ethics and law. "A Modern Approach to the Bible" was the subject of the November meeting to which the Columbia students were invited. At subsequent meetings, lectures on drama, and on cultural patterns in Palestine were heard, and at the final meeting with Columbia, Dr. Milton Steinberg summarized the previous addresses in a discussion of the enrichment of American life by the application of these culture patterns.

NEWMAN CLUB

The Newman Club of Barnard College exists for a three-fold purpose; spiritual, intellectual, and social. The club aims to make its members conscious of the significant relationship of the Catholic faith with the world today.

This year, with the help of Father Ford, Catholic adviser to Barnard and Columbia students, the members made a study of Catholic dogma and thought, and heard speakers on pertinent subjects of the day connected with problems of moral and religious importance, with an open forum discussion afterward.

The first social event was a tea for incoming Catholic students, with Mme. Charlotte Muret and Miss Theresa Carbonara presiding. At another meeting Dr. Frederick Rice discussed the Catholic attitude toward birth control. Every third Sunday of the month, there was a coffee hour in the Corpus Christi Church auditorium, with a speaker of note, or a musicale, followed by dancing. The climax of the activities of the group was the Province week-end in February. Members from all the Newman clubs in the East gathered in New York to attend the discussion groups, the tea dance, and the formal dance at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. All members attended Mass and Communion Sunday morning.

JUNIOR PROM

One hundred juniors and their escorts attended the most important social event of their college careers, Junior Prom. The dance was held on February eighteenth in the Jade and Basildon rooms of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to the tune of Dick Messner's orchestra.

Under the capable leadership of Elizabeth Jackson, the committee planned a dance which every prom-trotter agreed was a huge success. The class supported enthusiastically the excellent arrangements made by the committee. Stunning white leather bids engraved in gold took the place of favors. A delicious midnight supper, which did credit to Oscar, was served in the adjoining Astor Gallery. Dancing continued until three o'clock. The consensus of opinion was that it was a grand prom.

JUNIOR SHOW

" '39 Steps," the Junior Show of the class of 1939, was presented on March 11 and 12 in Brinckerhoff Theatre. It concerned itself with the efforts of the Juniors to inaugurate charm classes at Barnard. They made an arrangement with the faculty whereby, if charm classes were given, the Juniors promised to raise money for the new building by presenting a show. This plan appealed to the entire faculty (who didn't like the idea of raising all that money themselves) with the exception of Anna Lysis, beautiful but cold Science Adviser, who disapproved of Love. Although alone in her disapproval, she almost spoiled the entire plan by raising the familiar spectre of eligibility. Fortunately, at the crucial moment, Professor Elizabeth Arden transformed Anna Lysis' unofficial assistant, the Grind, from "Death Takes a Holiday" into "Life Goes to a Party." When the Grind reappeared beautified, Anna Lysis saw, to her horror, that the extremely impressionable Professor of Romantic Languages, Bachelor D'Artes, until then her own distant admirer, seemed interested. Hastily she reconsidered, with the result that Love triumphed over all, eligibility was maintained, and the charm classes were saved, as " '39 Steps" ended.

Work on " '39 Steps" started early in November, continuing up until the last moment. Although the show took a lot of work, everyone concerned felt fully recompensed by the generous reception accorded it by the college.

ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION ACTIVITIES

Each member of the Undergraduate Association of Barnard College automatically belongs to the Athletic Association. The Athletic Association Board, assisted by the Physical Education Department, plans and directs certain events throughout the year. The purpose of the Athletic Association is to stimulate interest in sports among the students of Barnard, and to provide ample opportunities for recreation both on the campus and at the Barnard camp in Westchester. In some of the classes in physical education numerals and awards are given by the Athletic Association.

Sports Week was the first activity this year. Tags were distributed to be worn around school by patriotic students. Freshman Day, which opened Sports Week, featured intersectional games and a faculty-student badminton exhibition. On Tuesday Professors Reichard and Greet downed the student tenniquoit team 37-33. In tennis Riccio and Caruso tied Youtz and Este. Wednesday "The Culprits," or faculty volleyball team, won four consecutive games. The main event Thursday was an archery tournament, followed by the Hallowe'en Hop Friday night, bringing Sports Week to a close.

Hallowe'en Hop, formerly Harvest Hop, was held in the gymnasium, which was transformed into an old barn. A most welcome innovation was the serving of cider and doughnuts on Jake during the dance. Jane Bell, vice-president of the Athletic Association, directed Hallowe'en Hop, assisted by Betty Armstrong, Dorothea Eggers, Charlotte Hall, Mary Hagan, Elizabeth Jackson, and Barbara Ridgway.

Eating on Jake or in the Jungle is encouraged at Barnard . . . that is . . . if it is an apple from the Italian fruit cart, or milk or tomato juice from the bar. These were sponsored by the health committee of the Athletic Association, and, for the benefit of a few skeptics, heartily endorsed by Doctor Alsop.

The Athletic Association banquet was held last May to install the new officers. According to tradition, prominent freshmen served as waitresses, being loads of fun for all concerned. At this time awards were made in swimming, basketball, and volleyball. After dinner, excerpts from Junior Show and Faculty Follies were presented. Laura Miles was chairman of the banquet, and her assistants were Charlotte Hall, Audrey Caruso, Margaret Strobel, Margo Kuhlman, and Elizabeth Harpel.

DANCING

What does the word "dancing" mean at Barnard? The exact definition would be gymnasium classes in which folkdancing, clogging, or rhythmic fundamentals are taught. However, there is more to dancing than just this. Believing that modern dancing is essential for poise and an excellent form of recreation, the Physical Education department organized an advanced dance group under the guidance of Miss Marion Streng. Not only were rhythmic fundamentals learned and stressed, but the members of the group composed original dances and performed in public. With the assistance of the Glee club, the dance group gave a program at one of the Tuesday assemblies and again in McMillin Theater.

All-college folkdancing festivals were held twice this year; once at the Campus Carnival for the benefit of the Land and Building Fund, and again this spring. Folkdancing is one of the oldest known forms of recreation, but is kept alive and growing by the constant addition of new dances in every country. This year, American mountain dances were taught in class and were performed at the folkdancing festivals.

Clogging is self-explanatory. Who knows—Barnard may have a future Ruby Keeler or Eleanor Powell in one of the present clogging classes?

Rhythmic activities are felt to be so important at Barnard that they rank equally with team sports, individual sports, and swimming, and a student must have either average ability or minimum standard in dancing if she is to get senior exemption in physical education. Whether one takes dancing with both eyes on exemption, or just "to take gym at that hour," she will enjoy it thoroughly and will find herself signing up for it again the following season.

BASKETBALL

While Barnard does not have varsity teams, there is no lack of competition in games between advanced classes, "odds and evens," and in faculty-student and alumnae-student games. The two-court game was introduced at Barnard several years ago, replacing the old three-court game. The new ruling makes a faster and more exciting game possible, thus increasing interest in the sport.

In class periods plays and maneuvers are taught to the students by the "coach," and in the intramural and faculty-student games these plays are put into practice. Each girl in the class periods is tried at different positions to find out where she plays best, and her errors are corrected and her game generally improved. Official rules are taught and student officials are trained. It is felt that individual achievement and not group competition should be the aims of the basketball classes of Barnard College.

SWIMMING

Barnard experiences hardly a moment of inertia produced by the transition from summer to winter, thanks to the swimming pool. Classes and open hours are offered all year 'round to novice and expert alike, and a Red Cross life saving course is conducted each year.

A spectacular and somewhat hilarious water carnival featured demonstrations of aquatic skill, amusing skits, and breath-taking stunts. This year the water carnival portrayed "Naval Maneuvers in Hawaii."

Second, first class, and expert awards are given in swimming, not for competitive or team participation as in other sports, but for individual progress. Thus, there is no limit to the number of girls receiving awards each year, the only requirement being the fulfillment of the necessary number of tests for each award.

TENNIS

The tennis season nearly overlapped the ice-skating season this year, since the addition of the Riverside Courts increased our facilities. They have proven to be a haven for those not wishing to be seen playing all day, as well as for the none-too-confident novice. With the rapid development of raw material and the increased interest in this sport, we may be faced with the possibility of a tennis "exit." Tournaments were greeted enthusiastically, and the quality of our game has so improved that dubs can't get a chance at the courts. Twelve inches of snow in April threatened to delay the rolling of the tennis courts. To everyone's relief, however, tennis began on time.

ARCHERY

Archery classes, which are given during the outdoor seasons, are open to any student, regardless of her health grade. Not a strenuous sport, it is invaluable, however, in training the eye in marksmanship and in coordination of the muscles. Each semester an archery tournament is conducted by the Athletic Association to test the skill of the Barnard Dianas and Robin Hoods. The winner, thanks to Miss Marjorie Tuzo, instructor, could compete and easily hold her own with the best Marine Corps sharpshooter. It is indeed a welcome sight to those interested in archery to see in the Jungle the sign, "Danger, archery classes in session."

TOURNAMENTS

Under the auspices of the Athletic Association, tournaments are conducted in tennis, both singles and doubles, badminton, tenniquoit, archery, and ping-pong. These are not limited to the members of those classes but are open to the college at large. The interclass and faculty-student games, with the exception of baseball, are limited to the students of those classes. Because baseball was not taught at Barnard this year, the participants in the faculty-student games were chosen from those who signed up. Faculty-student games and tournaments are always a source of great enjoyment both to the participants, and to the many spectators.

VOLLEYBALL

Since volleyball attained its status as a major sport, it has been actively and enthusiastically supported. Sectional tournaments and interclass games serve to encourage participation at Barnard.

As it is played indoors, volleyball is the one year-round team sport, as popular in the spring and fall seasons as it is in the winter.

In the first semester, a faculty-student tournament was held as a feature of Sports Week. A formal interclass round robin tournament was the highlight of the second semester indoor season.

The best players of the various teams were selected to play on an all-star team against the faculty during Play Day, which concluded the season. There was a game with New College, and on Alumnae Day the All-Stars played a team composed of old grads.

RIDING

This year is the first time that riding has been conducted by one of the members of the Physical Education department as a class for credit. Miss Lelia Finan has had charge of it and has made it a very successful venture.

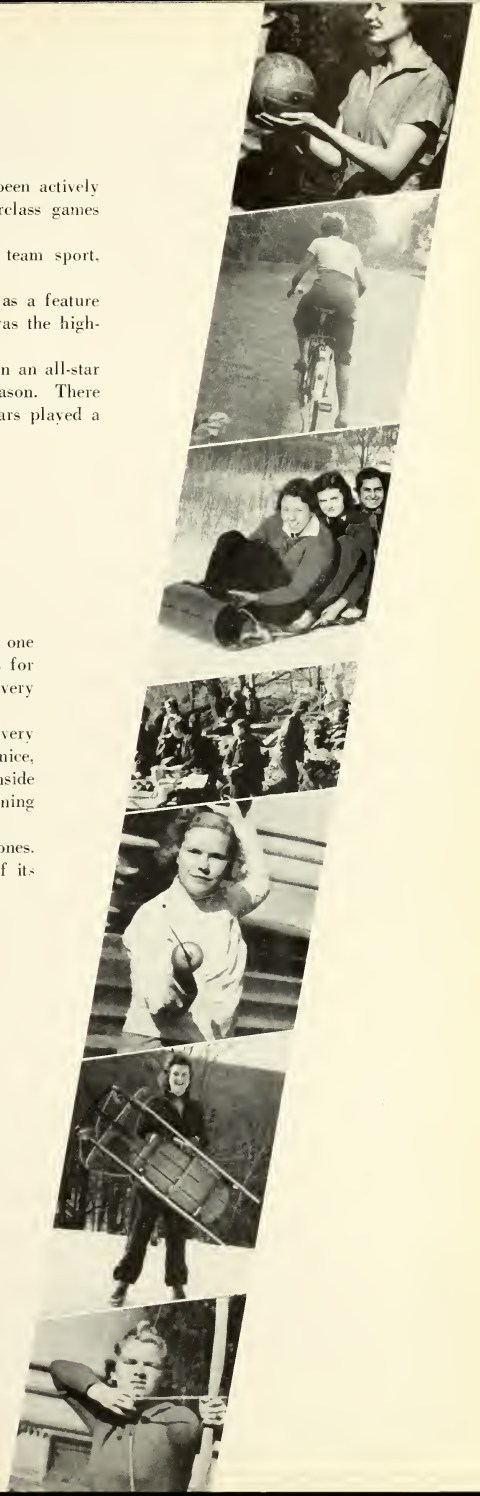
Thirty-five girls participated in the sport. They rode every Friday and twice during the noon hour. When the weather was nice, the girls went through Central Park. Otherwise the riding was inside the rings down at 66th Street. Every other week there was an evening class conducted indoors with riding to music.

In April, four extra classes were held besides the weekly ones. The regular schedule was continued at the same time because of its previous success.

BADMINTON

Badminton is a perennial favorite, both with faculty and students. At every noon hour or class period, the confirmed addicts may be seen chasing the elusive shuttlecock ("bird" to you) and showing energy and enthusiasm at every step. The extraordinary popularity of this sport is shown by the large number of students at the tournaments, both as active participants and as spectators.

The goal of the physical education program is to provide the opportunity for every student to acquire proficiency at some sport which she may enjoy outside of college. Badminton is recommended as possessing the necessary requirements for such a sport, and the classes are immediately filled to capacity when the students register for gym.



CAMP

Probably the most appreciated and most used gift of the Associate Alumnae to the students of Barnard is Camp. Situated in the Hudson River Valley a few miles outside of Ossining, New York, it is the week-end retreat pleasure spot for dorm and day students alike.

Camp is directed by a student committee under the supervision of the Physical Education department. Each weekend is "led" by a member of the committee, who buys the food and makes all arrangements, and a faculty member or alumna chaperons. Each semester each class and the alumnae have a week-end; others are given over to barbecues and to clubs and groups of students who wish to be together. Between the fall and spring semesters there is "open house" for those who wish to recuperate from examinations, and also intercollegiate week-end.

As a member of the Dirt Trails Association, guests at Camp may use any of the beautiful trails maintained by this organization. Several kind neighbors allow the use of their large lakes and picnic groves. Nearby is the Croton reservoir with its colossal spillway.

Camp activities are varied, mostly according to the season of the year. In the winter there is skiing, skating, and sledding, and most superior snow. In the fall and spring there is hiking, outdoor sports, archery, and at Christmas an open week-end features turkey, a tree and presents. The Barbecue week-ends are most popular, probably because of the smoke-flavored lamb or chicken cooked outdoors and served right from the spits. Every June a campcraft course lasting two weeks is conducted by Miss Margaret Holland of the Physical Education department. This course is for the purpose of training leaders for the coming scholastic year, and its participants are selected by Miss Holland upon application to her. The knowledge and experience gained from this course is exceedingly useful to anyone interested in camps and camp life.

Barnard Camp, as you can judge from the pictures on the opposite page is a place where one can live simply; yet not have to rough it. It is a low, rustic building with a wide porch for sunbaths and general airings. Inside there is a big fireplace and living room, with sleeping quarters nearby. The grounds are spacious, and the location private. Each Wednesday there is a meeting of all who are going to Camp the following week-end. A dollar deposit is made then and there so the leader can buy food in advance, and menus are planned. Friday the girls leave for camp, via car or train. A "K.P." list is planned for each meal by the leader, so no one girl or girls will have to do all the work, although it is really fun.

The basis of camp, as is expressed on the folder, is goodwill and cooperation; and the results of camp are friendships and good times, thanks to the camp committee, the faculty supervisors, and the alumnae who gave such an enjoyable present to Barnard College.

PRESENTING — THE FRESHMEN

THE METAMORPHOSIS OF A FRESHMAN

For two years we looked forward to having Freshman sisters. We were not so eager when we were Freshmen because we were fussed over and everybody took care of us, told us what to eat, and when to sleep, and how to tackle professors and where everything was and how to do our work, and especially took us to teas. This was nice because we felt somewhat lost and because we were gentle creatures and liked to be led by the nose. But after some time we became tired of the cotton wool. It was then that we began to look forward to smothering some other fortunate person with tenderness and care. This was not because we were vindictive or in any way ungrateful. We merely wanted to return twofold to someone else all the kindnesses we had received.

The yearning for Freshman sisters was, however, more or less, latent until we became Sophomores. It was at that stage that the desire overcame us and made us realize how empty our lives were and that we needed, as it were, the patter of childish feet. It was a transitional period from the time when we wished to be sheltered to the time when we wished to shelter others. As Sophomores we were left completely out in the cold. Nobody loved us. Nobody took care of us. We were not even taken to teas. When we finally got the courage to go to a tea under our own steam, nobody saw that we were fed. And as a matter of fact, we were not. The Freshmen had been given all the cookies. Even if the cookies were not all gone, the guardian of the cookies swept them by us, to give them with coos and smiles to some Freshmen. This clarified everything for us. We wanted something over which to coo and smile, too.

It was most exciting that summer to get a card with the names of our very own Freshmen sisters. We immediately wrote eager letters overflowing with the desire to be helpful. In answer we received the most courteous little notes imaginable. In the fall we dashed back to school for we knew that we now had something to give meaning to life.

We were told that the Freshmen this year were very young and bright, infant prodigies, in fact. We liked that. We thought that infant prodigies were shy, inarticulate creatures who needed guidance and comforting, protection from the cruel world. And even if they were not, their youth made us feel quite superior with wonderfully mature qualities like emotional stability and integrated personalities. We certainly looked forward to meeting our Freshmen sisters.

We promptly met our sisters on Jake and took them out to lunch. During lunch we told them all about Barnard traditions. We held forth on what they should and should not do. We warned them of all the pitfalls. We particularly stressed the difficulties of changing programs because we had just gone through an especially hectic session about that. Everything had been beautiful but at that point one of the Freshmen said she could not understand the necessity of changing our program. After all, you knew what you wanted to do. You had made up your mind the term previously about the courses best suited for this. This shifting of subjects was sheer light-mindedness. This silenced us for the time and our guests began to talk. In their conversation it appeared that they knew far better than we all that we had been orating about. Moreover they knew exactly what they wanted to do and how to go about doing it. We were not even able to think, "Ah, the assurance of youth, alas!" For they were very cool and wise. We were distinctly nonplussed and left the restaurant in a thoughtful mood.

We decided to investigate the problem several weeks later because we had suffered a crushing blow in the realization that we had been thinking that all the Freshmen we met were upperclassmen and that they had been thinking we were Freshmen. They were very nice about it and told us that it was probably the young way we dressed our hair. Now we do not dress our hair. We let it grow on our heads, as anyone can see. The Freshmen were being tactful. So, all in all, we were suffering from a drastic deflation of the ego.

It was this that decided us. We were going to find out what was happening to one of Barnard's most cherished traditions. Why were not these Freshmen the young and dewy-eyed beings we were? And since, obviously, they were not the delightfully naive persons we had dreamed of, what were they? Moreover, what could we do about it? We set about observing Freshmen carefully, making notes in our little notebooks, fully prepared to define our terms and defend our conclusions.

Freshmen, it appeared, got up bright and early in the morning, unlike us who got up at ten minutes before we had to leave for classes. This gave us more of an inferiority complex than ever. We thought of all the things we had heard about doing your best work when the mind is fresh. We felt thoroughly unhappy. We felt all better when we found that they got up early not to study but to eat a big breakfast. It made our awe of them seem a bit silly. The more we thought about it, the more distinctly happy we became. One morning we decided that we too should eat a huge breakfast. It was a miserable failure. The sight of the food was horrible when all we could do was hold our heads up and drink some black coffee. Our spirits became low again. How could those girls eat fruit and cereal and bacon and eggs and coffee and toast after five hours sleep (our usual average)? We marveled at the constitution of the young. However, on inquiry we found that Freshmen do not sleep five hours. They sleep nine. They go to bed nice and early after a warm bath and after setting their hair. When they set their alarm clocks it is not because they could not possibly get up otherwise. For them it is merely a little rite. They usually are awake to turn off the alarm before it blares out. This made us feel bitter.

It made us ask crossly if the faculty were weakening under their charm and forgetting that even Freshmen have to work. "Certainly not," they virtuously replied. In fact, they were positive that they worked much more than we did. They kindly explained for our benefit that they did their work from day to day and did not have to stay up till ungodly hours of the night. They did not have to cram for quizes. They got along beautifully. Breathlessly we asked about writing papers. They even had time for revisions after letting it rest for a couple of days. We did not ask any more questions.

That was the end of our investigations. It was too much to ask of mortals to continue any longer. But at least we knew the answer to one question, why the college was no longer what it used to be. It was that for the first time there was a class in Barnard that was what college students should be, not what they are. These girls had plenty of sleep to keep them little paragons. They got proper meals at proper hours. They had time to care for their hair and nails and eyebrows. They got their work done in plenty of time and got it done well. They were the pride and joy of all who knew them except us. We were just sour.

Saddest of all we knew only too well that there was nothing we could do about it. They were incorruptible. We found that out when we tried to corrupt them. You could no more persuade them to let their work slide till the next day and go to the movies than you could persuade them to cut their classes. We retired from the field. Nay we were routed from the field.

We were forced to slink into our shells and avoid the bright eyes of our Freshmen sisters. But we are happy to tell you that we did not have to continue so for very long. Towards the end of the year we noticed that gradually the Freshmen had taken to missing classes. We saw that when we greeted them cheerfully in the early morning they either barked or growled. Indeed our most cheerful efforts only made them growl the more. From the slightly bleary eyes of our younger colleagues we judged that somehow those nine hours of sleep were diminishing. And the most joyous sight of all, we saw a Freshman flying across the campus at nine minutes after two, proof-reading her manuscript. We gathered it had just been torn from the typewriter. Her hair was a mess, too.

The burden that had been lying upon us almost a year was lifted. Our Freshmen sisters, adamant to all our influence, had in some way lost their good habits. They had become human beings! But all this impressed us with its deeper significance. It made us realize more clearly than ever before the strength of a college education. The quiet atmosphere, the serene halls, the associations with scholars and with great books, no matter how you resist them, they cannot help but affect you. You can build no barrier strong enough to withstand the effect of their quiet wisdom. Four college years must leave their mark. After them, you are never the same unthinking being you were before.

According to an old legend, the discovery of the principle of printing from moveable type was a matter of "Pot Luck" . . The young son of a dye-maker accidentally dropped a carved wooden initial in a pot of dye. When he set this dyed letter on a skin to dry, it left an imprint.
From this came printing.

POT LUCK

Printing today is a far cry from the days when it was just a matter of "Pot Luck." Through the years, craftsmen have always striven to achieve better printing.

Although the day of fine, but laborious, hand printing is over, the spirit of the craftsmen does not die. If, with the increasing demand for speed, fine books can no longer be printed by hand, it does not mean that fine printing will stop. It means, rather, that artisans and craftsmen will find another way to maintain the standards of their guild.

The solution does not lie solely in machines that can cast more lines of type per hour, nor in presses that can print more pages per minute. The solution lies in machines in combination with skilled workers.

Lyon and Armor were among the first to recognize this fact. And Lyon and Armor have supplied their personnel, all of them weaned on printer's ink, with the latest, most efficient, printing equipment. The result is printing of the finer sort . . . at a speed in tempo with present day production.

Design for Yearbooks

Not merely for the sake of keeping abreast with modern design .... but, above all, to produce an annual of which you will be proud.

This class book, a printed view of student life, was planned and engraved by...
